Mayor Dawn Friend said the school had planned their day so well that it was a perfect time to have a contest between their two ice-cream flavours. "The school has been working hard on a campaign to raise money for a community centre and this was the perfect opportunity for them to hit the community right where it hurts, the stomach," said Friend. "We had a cold start and ended up with a warm finish," Hugh Murray, a children's ice-cream company representative for the 2017 season, made the two original ice-cream flavours and was there to share his company's product with the children. The school had won the competition to receive the free ice-cream, but they did not know just what flavour they were receiving until Murray explained. "I was a little taken back," said Brigden Principal Thomas Wilby. "It was amazing. Our usual ice cream is chocolate but I was also thinking that they have been eating some really great food lately and we were in the midst of really fine weather." Murray said his company has won an award for its product within the last few months. Wilby, however, said his students all voted for strawberry, but Brigden didn't tell Murray that. Friend said she is impressed with the school's leadership as well as the students who organised the event. She also said the event is all about connecting the children with the community. "Hugh Murray said they were inspired by the team that came together to create the event," said Friend. "It was very inspirational for us. This isn't a just a summertime activity. They are young leaders and we hope to see more of them coming forward to bring the community together."Q: Converting an HTML table to CSV I have the following table and I am trying to convert it to a CSV that looks like the picture below. Here's what I have right now. I am not sure how to convert the first record/line of the table to an open/close CSV, as it will be duplicated. I am ok with it looking
